Building on the work of William Dolliver 2019

Between 1895 and 1899 William H. Dolliver was tasked with recording tombstone inscriptions throughout Gloucester. His work, originally recorded in a bound book, provides us with valuable information about what was then intact and readable as well as a glimpse into the priorities of the late nineteenth century. These ended up being divided into three volumes and including two private cemeteries and two that are now in Rockport, MA.

A bit more than a 100 years later, Gloucester residents Edith Sparling and Mary Ray developed an invaluable index to the first volume of the hand-written Dolliver as well as recording inscriptions in additional documents. This index also included other information such as location, which, until it is replaced with GPS data, continues to be important in locating graves. In 2019 the Cemetery Advisory Committee undertook this project to provide greater access to these records.

We began by using crowd-sourcing to have each of the three volumes of Dolliver transcribed and we then formatted this data in an easily readable form. It is now digitized, searchable and readable. In addition, with the generous cooperation of the Gloucester City Archives and the Cape Ann Museum, we were able to scan a new copy from the 1895-99 originals, complete with colored inks, a vast improvement over the previously xeroxed versions. Our goal has been to reproduce an accurate rendition of Dolliver's work, as well as to provide the original for reference, which is why, in the final digital copy, these two kinds of pages are interleaved.

We wish to thank our faithful transcribers without whom this work would never have been done. In alphabetical order: Sandy Barry, Betsy Basch, Ron Breault, Sarah Corshia, Frances Fitch, Harriet Harding, Melissa and Russell Hobbs, Tara Kelly, Dot Marshall, Carol McKenna, Susan Morreale, Ed Mowbrey, Nancy Parnell, Ann Power Parsons, Sandra Reinecke, Isabel Sloane, Sue Straw, Janet Tang, and Maureen Vallis. Special thanks to Tara Kathleen Kelly, PhD, for her meticulous final editing of all three volumes.

Notes for the 2019 Copy of Volume I

1. Organization: In this volume Dolliver arbitrarily assigned stones certain numbers, marking them with paint or pencil on their back sides. We do find these numbers useful in locating gravestones (or noting their absence) but the numbers otherwise have no meaning and the former painted numbers on the stones are now all worn away. As we worked through the three volumes we did also find variations in format (for example, in Vol. II, there are no stone numbers for two of the cemeteries). In each volume or before each cemetery within the volume, notes from us clarify how we handled these differences. Handwriting varies among the volumes and so it is clear that at least some of our “original” versions must be copies.

2. Missing pages: As we began work on Vol. I of Dolliver, which covers only the First Parish Burial Ground (Bridge Street Yard), at first it seemed that there were a number of missing pages. As we continued, we discovered that almost all of the “missing” pages were in breaks between the alphabetical listings of last names, for example, on page 46, where the letter F names end, it says “G page 51” and then omits the pages 47-50 and, indeed, the letter G begins on 51 with Mary Goldsmith. We have made notes about such “missing” pages in the text. Most of these pages turn up in other volumes.

3. Exceptions to this pattern: Buried on pp 155-156, (Vol. I) between the alphabetical listings of S and T was a note written by Dolliver in 1895 to the “Gentlemen” of the Burial Ground Committee giving a general outline of his work. This volume also skips from the last transcription (page 208) to 221 where there is a short note regarding how the land for FPBG was set aside. In each succeeding volume we also found similar notes and we have added the page numbers for these notes to the introductory material for each cemetery.

4. Additional source to check for inscriptions: Inscriptions before 1700 have also been recorded (although transcribed by machine and thus, with many errors) in the Essex Antiquarian. https://archive.org/stream/essexantiquarian09perluoft/essexantiquarian09perluoft_djvu.txt Find-A-Grave offers information about many of these burials. While there are many errors in the entries, the photographs of the stones offer a sure way to check data. <https://www.findagrave.com/cemetery/1662188/first-parish-burial-ground>. See also vital records for Gloucester <http://ma-vitalrecords.org/MA/Essex/Gloucester/> and Rockport <http://ma-vitalrecords.org/MA/Essex/Rockport/>.

5. Accuracy: Is Dolliver a dependable source for information about these inscriptions? It varies. Please see A Brief Note on Dolliver and Accuracy included in this forematter.

6. Physical size: The original Dolliver pages came from a bound volume of not-quite legal size pages. Our scanned copies varied, depending on whether some margin area had been kept in the ripped out pages which we now have, between 8.01 inches and 8.5 inches X 13 inches. Our transcriptions were organized on typical 8 ½ X 11 paper. We have chosen to save the entire interleaved file in PDF with each section in its original size.

7. Maps: Constant reference is made to a number of physical locations for the stones, in Volume I in particular. In succeeding volumes, much has changed and the references, for example to the “yard behind Harvey’s Stables” (Cove Hill) no longer makes sense without a map from that era. In each case a map has been included in the introductory materials to aid in understanding these references and the cemeteries' locations.

8. Notes and Comments: Please note that when Dolliver himself used brackets to make comments, he used the { } format, at least until Volume III, Rockport. We did the same. So that there should be no problem in figuring out which are our modern comments and which were his asides and notes, all of our clarifying comments are denoted using squared brackets and the format [Note 2019: ____] There are occasional words that we found indecipherable or really questionable which are noted with the same squared brackets [?]. We also occasionally used [sic] when what might be taken as our typographical error is indeed correct for what Dolliver wrote, e.g. a wife's last name noted as Federicks in the line above where her husband's last name is Fredericks (on the stone both are clearly Federicks) or where Dolliver wrote "there" when grammatically it should have been "their". Archaic spellings were retained but not noted, e.g. lyes for lies, intired for interred etc.

Dolliver's punctuation is, at best, erratic by our 2019 standards. He mixes commas and periods or simply omits them at seemingly random places. In addition, there are many stray marks accumulated over the 100+ years of the existence of the manuscript. In general we have simply omitted the majority of these unless they are essential for understanding, while using generally accepted commas such as those between days and years.

In 1752 a major change in the calendar was made. England's calendar change included three major components. The Julian Calendar was replaced by the Gregorian Calendar, changing the formula for calculating leap years. The beginning of the legal new year was moved from March 25 to January 1. Finally, 11 days were dropped from the month of September 1752.

<http://libguides.ctstatelibrary.org/hg/colonialresearch/calendar> Dolliver occasionally notes dates with reference to this when death dates fall between January and March. See, for example, "Here lyes Y^e Body of M^r John Bennet Dec^d February the 1st 1724/5 in the 39 year of his age"

9. Searching: The beauty of the digitized work is that it is completely searchable. But the original Sparling/Ray index to Volume I is still valuable and provides additional information as well as giving page references. When searching keep in mind that variant spellings were very common. Please note in particular these alternate spellings of names that differ in these volumes.

Betsy, Betsey	Haraden, Hariden, Harraden, Haaden

Corney, Corny	McEachrn, McEachern

9. Distribution: Copies of the interleaved and complete original Dolliver and the page by page transcription will be made available digitally on the City Website as well as being hosted by the Digital Commonwealth. Please note that a separate digital file of each volume's transcription without the originals will be included as well on the City website should any user wish to print a copy. Printed copies of the complete Dolliver, including the interleaved original pages, will be presented to the Gloucester City Council, the City Archives, the Sawyer Free Library and the Cape Ann Museum. Because of the flexible nature of digitization, we would welcome any notes from users about words or phrases which may have been deciphered incorrectly. We can then immediately amend our digital copies.

A Brief Note on Dolliver and Accuracy

From the beginning, we were clear that the project was transcribing what Dolliver himself had written, as accurately as possible—and not attempting to double-check every one of the thousands of entries for accuracy against census records, Find-A-Grave etc. This still left our courageous volunteers grappling with not only Dolliver's handwriting, but his seemingly capricious approach to capitalization and punctuation. (There were also the challenges posed by common 19th-century words like “intired,” which has since been replaced by “interred,” and was made none the clearer by the fact that distinguishing Dolliver's i's from his e's often entails searching doggedly for the dot over the i, which usually trails its vowel by several letters.)

With all that on our plate, and the transcriptions arriving in late October, it's perhaps understandable that we didn't immediately launch ourselves into the graveyards to double-check his work. The truth is that we assumed Dolliver had been as accurate as possible. After all, we were clearly looking at a labor of love; he several times wrote to the committee assuring them of his commitment to accuracy; and the grave marker inscriptions seemed thorough, as did the charming sketches he made of particularly unusual or interesting stones. And then came a lovely April morning in Annisquam Yard/Bay View. It's on a hill—quite literally, you're either going pretty much straight up or straight down in Annisquam Yard-- with a stunning view over the roofs below of the dark blue ocean out in Ipswich Bay, and there were stones with names that, at this point, to us, felt as familiar as family. And yet...

Well, even a quick glance made short work of Dolliver's capitalization dilemma: most stones are graven entirely in capital letters, so he appeared to have followed his instincts there. He liked capitalizing “Wife,” for instance: well, why not? More than understandable. Then I found the marker for Ada Jones. Dolliver wrote that it carries the inscription “Ada Jones daut of Benjamin & Mary.” But it doesn't, exactly. “Ada Jones daut of Benjamin & Mary O. Jones” is what is written on the stone. At some point Dolliver clearly decided that Ada's family name did not need to be repeated, either when he was copying it down in the graveyard, with his pen or pencil balanced on a stone or board, or when he recopied it into the finished manuscript, alphabetized with the rest of the Joneses. So, again, not totally accurate. But perfectly understandable.

Then I got to Daniel Griffin. “Daniel S. Griffin Died in Richmond Va in Rebel Prison Dec 28 1863” wrote Dolliver. “Died in Richmond Prison Va. Dec 28 1863” says the stone. It's a shame I didn't have an audience to amuse, as I checked the stone against the paper I was holding several times, as if the problem might be some odd eye condition that left me seeing the words “in Rebel Prison” where they shouldn't be. But no, the only place it was appearing where it shouldn't be was in Dolliver. And this is not remotely a transcription error. It's clearly an extra piece of information, something Dolliver knew, either from remembering it personally or from the Griffin family. He just... added it in, just as if it were on the stone, presumably for future generations who might not realize that Daniel Griffin died a prisoner of war, rather than being in Richmond Prison for some other, less honorable reason. Somehow it threw me even more because Dolliver often did insert little pieces of local information, but conscientiously marked them within brackets (informing the reader that Lucinda W. Bray {was the daughter of William and Rhoda Fears} for instance)—it was a habit that had made me trust him more.

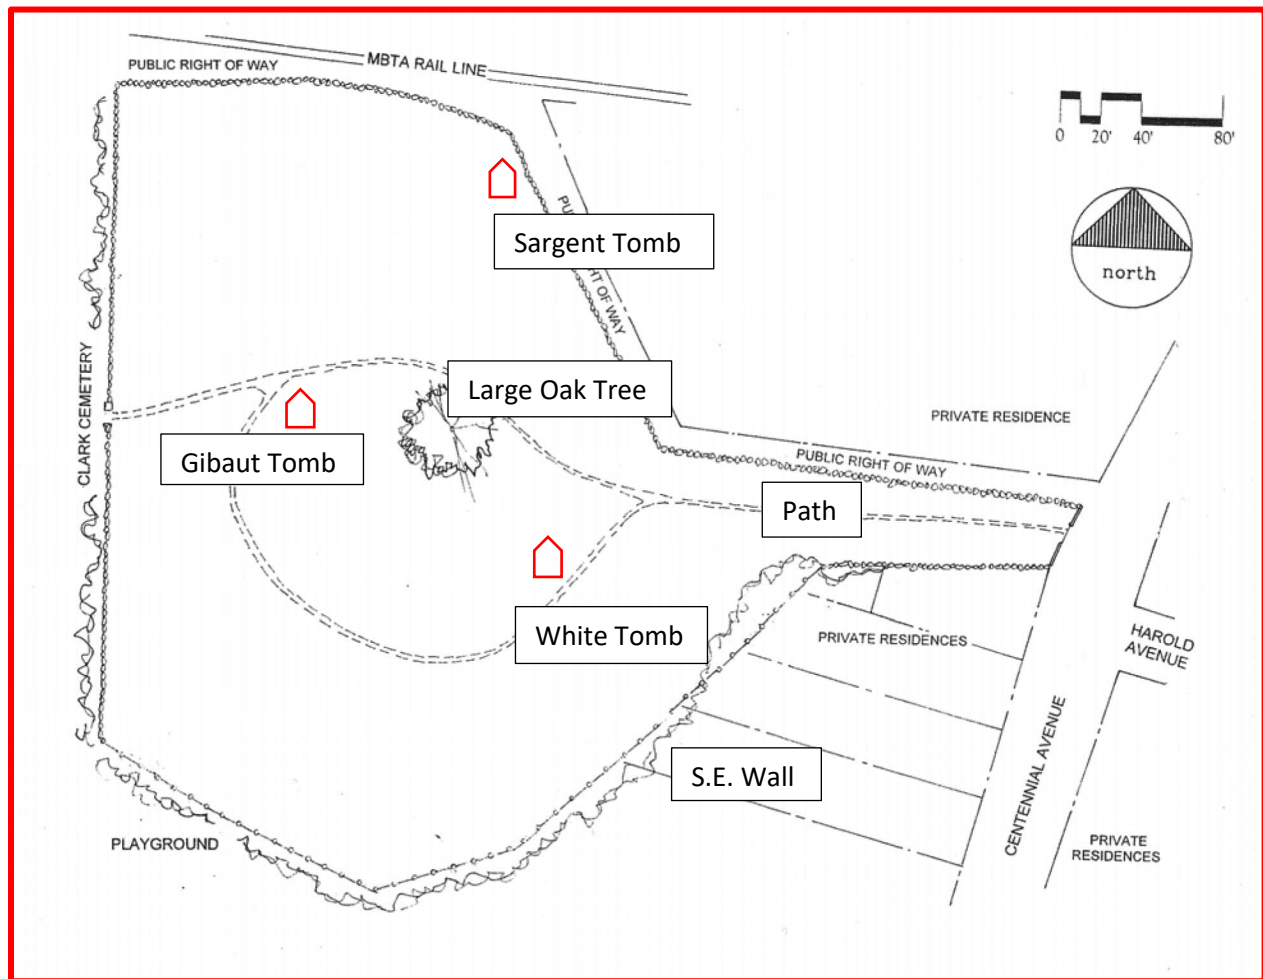

So what did “accuracy” mean to Dolliver? I think we can say “truth”—I still don't doubt that in 1863 Dan Griffin died in a rebel prison. But is everything in Dolliver an absolutely accurate representation of what is on the stone, and only what is on the stone, exactly the way you would see it if you stood in front of it on a breezy April morning with the violets just coming up around your feet? I can't promise you that. Where there's one deliberate interpolation, there are probably more—and where there's one transcription error, there are always others. But what you will find here is a best attempt, with hard work and good intentions, by dedicated volunteers to make Dolliver's own work available to you in a searchable form—the work he carried out over a hundred years ago, with hard work and good intentions, and with his own understanding of what “accuracy” meant.

I hope our transcriptions and the searchable format are helpful to you—the interleaved format means that you can also see Dolliver's own handwriting, which (we hope) will give you both an idea of what we were up against and also serve as a counterweight to any errors we may have made, despite our efforts. And if you are doing genealogical research and the information you find in Dolliver seems to contradict what you find in the census or Find-A-Grave or any of the .com sites—well, no one is perfect, but William H. Dolliver accomplished a mighty task indeed, and because of his work much has been saved, and will be remembered, that otherwise would have been weathered away in the Gloucester snow and rain.

-- Dolliver's Note regarding his work found on p. 155-156 of the original

Gentlemen of the Hon^{ble} body of Com on Burial Grounds, 1895:

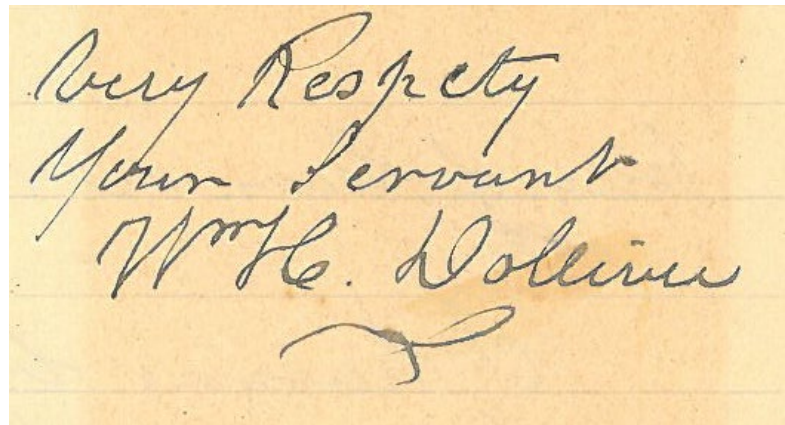

Sirs,

I having by your instructions, copied the Inscriptions on grave stones at the Old Church yard, at Bridge street, beg leave to make the following report.

I found the stones for the most part covered with moss, and worn with the storms of most 200 years, and in order to get at them, I was forced to clean or partially clean the surface of them, which took considerable time. I also marked them with painted figures, corresponding to figures in this book. A good many stones are broken, and with a little expence could be mended and last some time. during my labor in the yard, it was visited by a good many people, from out of town, who were seeking information in regard to their Gloucester Ancestry, and they were very much pleased to think the old marks of the Gloucester colonists were to be preserved.

I find a number of Rev Soldiers and Privateers men, who by refering to Mr Babsons History for names, could be easily located, by refering to numbers in this book. I have tried to copy, as they read on stone, word for word. I most respectfully recommend, at an early date, the stones be thoroughly cleaned, which I think could be done, and the Old Yard would pass inspection nearly as well as some of more recent date. Trusting my labor will meet your approval,

I am Sirs

Very Respcty
Your Servant
Wm H. Dolliver

I found 602 stones which were inscribed. I also find that throughout the whole yard are graves marked by {as I should judge} rough small stones at head and foot these are without any mark of any kind to designate who lies in the graves.

I also find that there are some stones over graves who were of the Catholic Church and also Protestants who have been put in this yard and from appearances are buried directly over the graves of some of the old settlers.

WmHD

The stones are marked N^o 1 commencing at Eastern entrance. the number on Stone will correspond to number in margin of this book. I have designated as far as possible the direction of each number and by following the numbers and direction the seeker can easily find the person or persons they may be seeking for.

For earth to pure, the pilgrim Angel fled
To bliss congenial in her native skies.
Of life, through youth, a flattering picture drew,
She sighed, and bade a worthless world adieu.
Torn from her arms, her cherub infant, lies like a fading flower, and withering, fades, and dies.
By Angels borne, it speeds to Heaven, & there it Blooms, former Fresh, former Fair:

Celestial Spirits, one passing tear forgive,
while not for You, but for Ourselves, we grieve.

Old Year Bridge street.

Gentlemen, of the Hon^{ble} body, of Com, on Banne Grimes, 1893.

Sirs,

I having by your instructions, copied the Inscriptions on grave stones, at the Old Church yard, at Bridge street, beg leave, to make the following report:

I found the stones, for the most part, covered with moss, and worn with the storms, of most 200 years, and in order to get at them, I was forced to clean, or partially clean, the surface of them, which took considerable time. I also marked them, with painted figures, corresponding to figures, in this book. As your many stones are broken, and with a little expense, could be mended, and last some time. During my labor in the yard, it was visited, by a great many people, from out of Town.
who were seeking information, in regard to their Gloucester ancestry, and they were very much pleased, to think the old marks, of the Gloucester Colonists, were to be preserved.

I find a number, of Rev Soldiers, and Privates men, who by referring to Mr Babson's History, for names, could be easily located, by referring to numbers, in this book. I have tried to copy, as they read on stone, were, for word. I most respectfully recommend, at an early date, the stones be thoroughly cleaned, which I think could be done, and the Old Year would pass inspection, nearly as well, as some, of more recent date.

I found 602 stones which were inscribed. I also find that throughout the whole yard are graves marked by {as I should judge} rough small stones at head and foot these are without any mark of any kind to designate who lies in the graves.

I also find that there are some stones over graves who were of the Catholic Church and also Protestants who have been put in this yard and from appearances are buried directly over the graves of some of the old settlers.
